

Susan Bane, MD, PhD

Dr. Susan Bane is an obstetrician/gynecologist who holds both her MD and PhD in Kinesiology from The University of Illinois. She has 25 years' experience practicing medicine and serves as the medical director of three pregnancy centers in Eastern, NC, seeing women with unplanned pregnancies. Susan serves as the Education and Advocacy Team Leader for the Board of the American Association of Pro-Life Obstetricians and Gynecologists and is a 2022 graduate of the TMC program at Duke Divinity School.

Lauren Barron, MD

Dr. Lauren Barron is the Michael E. DeBakey Chair for Medical Humanities at Baylor University where she directs the Medical Humanities Program. She has been a family physician for 30 years. In her addition to her work at Baylor University, she is affiliated with Waco Family Medicine, a federally qualified health center serving 60,000 of the most vulnerable patients in McLennan County.

Anna Berry, MD, MTS

Anna is a 3rd year combined Internal Medicine-Pediatrics resident at Vanderbilt University Medical Center. She completed her undergraduate studies at Baylor University in Biology and Medical Humanities, and subsequently attended Baylor College of Medicine. Between her 3rd and 4th years of medical school, Anna studied at Duke Divinity as a Theology, Medicine, and Culture Fellow while concurrently earning her MTS. Her current research interests include topics around community, formation, and the illness experience as they relate to the broader notions of patient care and medical training. After residency, she intends to pursue further training in pediatric cardiology and ultimately hopes to practice within the field of adult congenital heart disease.

Andrew Borrer, MTS, PhD-c

Andrew Borrer is a Ph.D. Candidate in Theological Ethics at the University of Aberdeen and a Theology, Medicine, & Culture Research Fellow at Duke Divinity School. He works at the North Carolina Study Center, teaching scripture and theology to undergraduates at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Martha Carlough, MD, MPH

Martha Carlough is a consulting professor in theology and medicine at Duke Divinity School and professor of family medicine and director of the Office of Global Health Education at UNC-Chapel Hill. Dr. Carlough has more than 30 years of experience in clinical and public aspects of maternal and child health, including a decade of work in Nepal. As a spiritual director trained in the Ignatian tradition she leads spiritual formation for the Theology, Medicine and Culture Initiative.

Alexandra Cist, MD

Alex Cist, MD swims in the waters of clinical care, ethics, and hospital chaplaincy. She received her training in Pulmonary & Critical Care at Massachusetts General Hospital (MGH) and in Clinical Ethics through Harvard Medical School, where she is faculty in the Center for Bioethics. After several years as a practicing physician and ethics consultant, she dipped her toes into CPE—Clinical Pastoral Education—and now serves as a Chaplain at MGH while she works her way through Gordon Conwell Theological Seminary, with a concentration in Spiritual Formation. She and David have two faith-filled daughters who keep them on their toes and engaged in campus, service, and cross-cultural ministries. They worship everywhere and at Park Street Church, Boston.

Tara Corbett, MSW, MTS

Tara Corbett (she/her) is a social worker, facilitator, and advocate primarily addressing sexual trauma, intimate partner violence, and reproductive rights. She received her MTS from Duke Divinity School in 2019 where she also completed the TMC Fellowship. Tara can usually be found deep in thought about the intersections of theology, faith, and her work. She lives in Durham, NC with her spouse and their two dogs.

Brewer Eberly, MD, MACS

Brewer Eberly is a third-generation family physician working at Fischer Clinic in Raleigh, North Carolina. He completed his family medicine residency and chief residency at AnMed Health in Anderson, South Carolina. He is a McDonald Agape Fellow in the Theology, Medicine, and Culture Initiative at Duke Divinity School, having completed the Theology, Medicine, & Culture Fellowship while in medical school and the Paul Ramsey Fellowship with the Center for Bioethics & Culture while in residency. He has been published widely, including JAMA, Christianity Today, Academic Medicine, and most recently, Plough.

Jenna Frush, MD, MTS

Jenna Frush is a third year Emergency Medicine resident at Boston Medical Center. She studied Psychology at Duke University as a women's basketball team member, then served as co-captain her senior year. She went on to obtain an MD from Duke's medical school, as well as a Master of Theological Studies from Duke Divinity as a Theology, Medicine, and Culture fellow. Her research interests include religion and spirituality in the emergency department, the intersection of spiritual preferences and health equity, and the humanization of medical practice.

Togor Gado, MSW-c

Togor is a social worker, facilitator, and advocate addressing sexual trauma and mental health in racialized minorities and ethnic groups. She received a BS in Biochemistry from Charleston Southern University and will complete an MSW from Winthrop University in December and pursue a clinical license. Togor cares deeply about supporting climate justice efforts and integrating theology, mental health care, and spiritual formation practices in the West African context. She lives in Durham and enjoys volunteering at her local farm.

T. Clark Howell, MD

Thomas "Clark" Howell is a general surgery resident at Duke University Hospital. He obtained his MD from UNC after earning a BS in Industrial Engineering and an MS in Health Systems at Georgia Tech. He is currently in a 2-year post-doctoral research fellowship working in a healthcare operations data science lab, the LTA. He also is investigating the character formation of surgeons in The Project on the Good Surgeon and attended Duke Divinity School earning a Certificate in Theology and Healthcare.

Micah Rojo, BSN, MTS-c

Micah Rojo is an Oncology Nurse and member of the Ethics Consult Service at Duke University Hospital. He is also a MTS student and Theology Medicine and Culture Fellow at Duke Divinity School.

Chad Thompson, MD

Chad Thompson is a family medicine physician who currently lives in Waco, TX where he is an adjunct professor at Baylor University in the Medical Humanities department. He also works as a community preceptor at Waco Family Medicine Residency.

John Thorp, MD

Dr. Thorp is the McAllister Distinguished Professor of Obstetrics and Gynecology at the University of North Carolina School of Medicine and Gillings School of Global Public Health. He has contributed to discoveries that limited the routine use of episiotomy, described the role of progesterone and magnesium in preterm birth, and perinatal substance use. Thorp has worked all of his professional life to advocate for the moral status of the unborn and conscience rights in medical education and practice.